THE BIG FREEZE: OUR SNOW HEROES

Vet John is pet topic for happy owners

VETS are known for having to work in all weathers, tending to sick animals.

But customers of John Gunn of Abbeywood vets in Denton have been overwhelmed by his dedication to looking after their pets in his own time, even with a foot of snow on the ground.

"I think he's marvellous, I didn't know there were people like that around anymore," said Harold McMinn, 71, whose dog was tended to at home, with no call out fee, one evening because he and his were snowbound on Tarran Grove.

And Phil Duffy also had praise for John who came to collect his ill dog from home during a blizzard before Christmas as Phil was stuck at work.

As the dog needed major surgery, John kept her at the vets and tended to her, eventually dropping her home on Christmas evening.

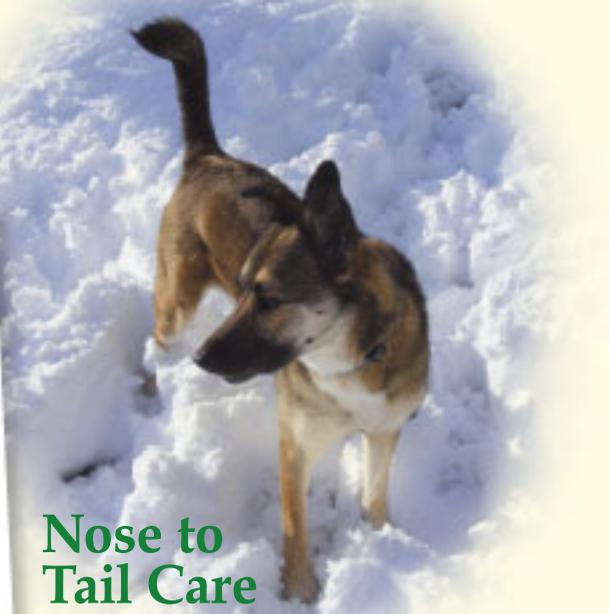

"The only time he wasn't available was during midnight mass and he even apologised for that! He is an absolute legend in my mind and I can't thank him enough," said Mr Duffy.

But John, a vet with 20 years experience, said it was all part of being a community vet.

"As I'm independently owned I have more flexibility to do those things. I live above the surgery and at night normally, divert the calls to an emergency service, but during the bad weather I wasn't, I was answering them myself. I was the only vet in the area open on the Tuesday so that was spent doing emergency cases. It's about being part of a community. It's definitely a vocation, not just a job."
